David Rock
Author and Leadership
Development Expert

David coined the term NeuroLeadership and is driving the use of neuroscience research in the workplace. His article 'The Neuroscience of Leadership' has become one of the most popular papers at strategy+business magazine, where it was published in 2006. His work was featured in US Business Week in 2007, and was cover story for Society of Human Resource Management's magazine in 2008.

David is on the faculty and advisory board of CIMBA, an international business school based near Venice, where he is helping build a neuroscience-based MBA. David is also the founder of Results Coaching Systems, which assists global organisations such as EDS, HSBC, AIG and American Express build coaching cultures.

He is the author of three books, including 'Quiet Leadership' and the soon to be released 'Coaching with the Brain in Mind'. David founded the NeuroLeadership Summit and is collaborating closely with several senior neuroscientists on research.

David is undoubtedly at the forefront of leadership development globally.

Special Breakfast Event with David Rock

The Neuroscience of Leadership

Join global thought leader, David Rock for this special 2 hour breakfast designed to give leaders, coaches and managers a new understanding of leadership through the lens of neuroscience.

This special presentation explores the key science that underpins being a great leader and ultimately provides a new model for interacting effectively with others, particularly in the workplace.

The domains of focus that David's presentation will examine include:

- How well do we know ourselves?
- How do we make decisions and solve problems?
- How well do we stay cool under pressure?
- How do we get on with others?
- How do we drive change?

David will share research from the emerging field of Neuroleadership and how its findings can help improve change programs, leadership development, cultural initiatives, training and performance.
